Airbus jets account for about a quarter of the global fleet, or nearly 6,000 aircraft, including this Korean Air A380 handed over in May

SCALING UP AGAIN

Already 25,000-plus aircraft strong, the global commercial fleet edged up 1.7% over the past year, with Airbus-Boeing dominance sustained by narrowbody deliveries

DAVID KAMINSKI-MORROW LONDON

DATA COMPILED BY ANTOINE FAFARD

Former Soviet types continued to dwindle from the global operating airliner population in 2011, as some 500 net airframes from the major Western manufacturers pushed up the overall world fleet by 1.7% to 25,783 aircraft.

Our annual worldwide airliner census starkly illustrated the difference between the two camps, as deliveries of 1,176 primarily Western-built types eclipsed the paltry contribution of just six airframes from the former Soviet states.

That contrasted with the retirement of over 120 ageing Russian and Ukrainian-built types – seven times the rate of their Western counterparts. Flightglobal's figures, compiled from its ACAS database, indicate that the Tupolev Tu-154 and Yakovlev Yak-40 fleets, in particular, have been whittled back heavily. But this pace is likely to increase, as Boeing and Airbus aircraft continue to replenish carriers' fleets in Russia and the CIS countries, while tighter internal Russian legislation appears set to speed the withdrawal of other mainstay types, including the Tupolev Tu-134 and certain Antonov turboprops.

Although the Sukhoi Superjet 100 and Antonov An-148 programmes have started generating serially-built aircraft and deliveries to customers, both remain at single-figure levels.

Despite the efforts of the Russian government to stir interest in domestic production, there is uncertainty over the prospects for the Tupolev Tu-204SM, while the Irkut MS-21 will not appear at least until 2014.

The number of idle Western jet aircraft retreated slightly in 2011, to about 2,900, but is yet to return to the levels seen before the 2008-

09 economic crisis. With IATA figures pegging the price of jet fuel at $130 per barrel at the end of July – up by more than 50% on the level a year ago – less-efficient types appear unlikely to return to revenue service, especially given the parting-out of even relatively young aircraft.

FUEL CONCERNS

Higher fuel prices, with less optimism over prospects of returning to sub-$100 levels, have driven interest in next-generation aircraft – notably the Airbus A320neo and re-engined Boeing 737 – on top of an underlying demand for both manufacturers' current lines.

By the end of July, Airbus had raised its backlog to more than 4,000 – a record for the airframer – after securing gross orders for 922 jets in the first seven months of 2011, buoyed by the strong interest in the A320neo. Boeing had listed a gross order total of 345 aircraft, including >> » 244 737s, even without the benefit of being able to offer a modernised model.

Airbus and Boeing have each raised production rate targets to 42 aircraft per month with the potential of further increases, and fewer permanent retirements – the figure for Western-built types is down by 15%, at 323 – is further evidence of an increased capacity demand and gradual recovery from the depths of the downturn.

North America's mature air transport market means the Americas overall account for 39% of the global fleet, with nearly 10,100 aircraft between the continents. The similarly-mature European market has a 29% share.

But in terms of regional development, unsurprisingly the Asian continent continues to emerge as a powerful market, accounting – along with Australasia and the Middle East – for more than 25% of the world fleet, close to 6,600 aircraft. The growth in the Asia-Pacific arena is reflected in the order backlog, where the region dominates the figures, where its demand for 3,543 aircraft accounts for over 50% of the total – more than double that of Europe and the Americas, which have 21% and 23% respectively.

The regional backlog split between the two main airframers favours Airbus in Asia, but Boeing in the Americas.

NARROWBODIES

Boeing's 737 family remains the most popular fleet, if all variants are included, with close to 5,000 aircraft across the globe. But the Airbus A320 family, with 4,390 aircraft, retains its top position – if the later-variant 737s, from the -600 upwards, are listed separately.

The older 737 'Classic' variants have fallen in number by nearly 2%, to fewer than 1,500, while their newer counterparts are approaching 3,500 with a 5.3% increase – a cut above that of the A320's 4.6%.

The US airframer dominates the overall Western fleet figures, with more than 10,000 aircraft – some 42% of the global total – although its total has fallen slightly, while Airbus experienced a marginal gain as its share approached 25%.

There was a strong rise in the Airbus A330 population to 6.3% – 765 aircraft, the twinjet demonstrating a continued popularity among operators. There was a 4% increase in the Boeing 777 fleet, to 928, and even the 767 – still being ordered by carriers as well as the US Air Force – saw a 1.8% rise to 840 airframes.

Between the 777 and 767, in fifth place, the 757 fleet of nearly 900 aircraft showed a slight rise as parked aircraft became active. It is also a market being vigorously pursued by Airbus

Libyan Airlines and Virgin Atlantic are among those listed in Airbus's 4,000-unit backlog with its A321neo – as illustrated by American Airlines' order for 130 in July.

Types falling out of favour included the Boeing MD-80, whose age and inability to match other twinjets' fuel performance are hastening its removal, while the in-service A340 fleet has also reduced to 332.

Turboprops headed the regional aircraft fleets of the 2011 census, with the Bombardier Q-series population increasing by 4.2% to 839, while the rival ATR 42 and 72 trailed with 776, up by 2.9%.

The increase in the turboprop fleets contrasted with the developments of the 50-seat jet sector, as the Embraer ERJ series declined by 1.9% to 766 – nevertheless holding third place in the ranking – and the 50-seat Bombardier CRJ fleet stayed largely flat. Fuel prices and poor yields have caused operators to turn away from 50-seat jets, and the preference for larger 70- to 90-seat jets is reflected in the census data, which shows a strong 6.2% rise in the Embraer E-Jet fleet, to 723 aircraft, and a more modest – but still positive – increase for the Bombardier CRJ700 and CRJ900.

Bombardier's regional jet population is lower than Embraer's, but its turboprop business enables the Canadian airframer to hold third place in the overall ranking for Western-built airframes, with 2,656 aircraft, with Brazil's Embraer in fourth with 1,764. ■

EXPLANATORY NOTES

This census data covers all commercial jet and turboprop-powered transport aircraft in service or on firm order with airlines worldwide, excluding aircraft that carry fewer than 14 passengers or equivalent cargo.

The tables are in two sections, both of which have been compiled by Flightglobal Insight using Flightglobal's ACAS database.

Section one records the fleets of the Western and Chinese-built airliners, and the second section records the fleets of Russia/CIS/Ukraine-built types.

The information is correct up to July 2011 and excludes non-airline operators, such as leasing companies and the military. Aircraft are listed in alphabetical order, first by manufacturer and then type.

Operators are listed by region, with any aircraft variant in brackets next to the operator's name.

Fleet data comprises the in-service fleet and, where applicable, the outstanding firm orders in parentheses in the right-hand column.

On the ACAS database, an airliner is defined as being "in service" if it is either "active" (in other words accumulating flying hours) or "parked".

An aircraft is classified as "parked" if it is known to be inactive – for example, if it is grounded due to airworthiness requirements or in storage – and when flying hours for three consecutive months are reported as zero.

The exception is where the aircraft is undergoing maintenance, where it will remain classified as active. Aircraft awaiting a conversion will be shown as parked.

The region is dictated by operator base and does not necessarily indicate the area of operation. Options and letters of intent (where a firm contract has not been signed) are not included. Orders by, and aircraft with, leasing companies and holding companies such as China Aviation Supplies are excluded, unless a confirmed end-user is known – in which case the aircraft is shown against the airline concerned.

Operators' fleets include leased aircraft. Aircraft being operated on wet-lease are generally listed with the company flying the aircraft, rather than the airline for which they are being operated.

The Russian/CIS/Ukrainian fleet data is based on information from the Russian commercial aircraft register, which can sometimes show aircraft owned by the state to be returned to the state when they are not being operated – for example, while undergoing maintenance. Because the data does not differentiate between aircraft returned temporarily or permanently, some airlines that have been temporarily removed from an airline's fleet and returned to the state may not be shown as being with the airline for which they operate. Russian aircraft tend to spend a long time parked before being permanently retired – much longer than equivalent western aircraft – so it can be difficult to establish the exact status of the "available fleet" (parked aircraft that could be returned to operation).

For more information on airliner types see our two-part World Airliners feature packages (Flight International, 26 October-1 November 2010 and 2-8 November 2010).

COMMERCIAL FLEET FORECAST

GLOBAL: 2011-2030

The Commercial Fleet Forecast report has been developed through a partnership between Flightglobal's Insight research team, with its unrivalled access to aviation market data, and Achieving the Difference's Clive Lewis, a market expert with decades of forecasting experience within the commercial aerospace sector.

Key facts:

- Independent view of the market
- No affiliation with any manufacturer
- Unrivalled data
- Robust methodology
- Global analysis with breakdown into seven world regions including China
- Western types and modern eastern types down to seat category, role and model series level in the short/medium term
- Fleet development considering conversions, retained fleet, growth demand, retirements, regional migration and deliveries

The Commercial Fleet Forecast report can be purchased as an annual package which includes two full reports.

Each report is supplied with a CD-ROM which contains the complete data used in the analysis.
